

Hiring the First Sales Leader Playbook

What is in the workbook?

Hiring the first sales leader is a critical but challenging task for startup founders. The two most common mistakes when making this hire are:

1. Overweight industry experience. Under-evaluate sales leadership skills: Often, with minimal domain knowledge on selling, we as product founders base this hiring decision largely on the candidate's experience in our industry. However, this lens is extraordinarily insufficient. We end up with a poor sales leader from our industry. We would have been much better off with a great sales leader from outside of our industry.
2. Hire a leader appropriate for 10 years out versus 2 years out: The other common mistake we make as startup founders is hiring a leader too far beyond our current stage. Even though our goal is to scale from $5 million to $20 million over the next two years, we are pressured by our investors to hire someone that has taken a company to $100 million. By pursuing this strategy, we struggle to convince candidates to join us, over-pay for what we need, and end up with a leader that implements processes appropriate for a $100 million company into one that is at $5 million.

This workbook is intended to enable founders with minimal sales experience to successfully hire their first sales leader. The workbook guides founders through 3 steps:

#1: Role Definition

What tasks does the organization need this person to do?

EXAMPLE TASK REQUIREMENTS, FIRST SALES LEADER
1.	Establish an operational sales strategy and sales process, 80% of the time for compensation purposes, 20% of the time for credit.

#3: Evaluation Process

What are the steps in the evaluation process and how do we execute each step?

Step 1 – Role Definition: What tasks does the organization need this person to do?

To avoid the common mistakes of over-weighting industry experience and hiring for the wrong stage, we start by more deeply defining the tasks that we need our first sales leader to conduct. When defining these tasks, focus on tasks required in the next two years. If we succeed with our two-year goals, we can re-visit leadership needs, assess whether our current leader meets those needs, and, if not, level-up the role.

EXAMPLE TASK REQUIREMENTS: FIRST SALES LEADER

1. Establish an annual sales plan defining our sales hiring goals, KPIs, and the corresponding monthly revenue output
2. Codify the first sales playbook, including setting meetings, executing discovery calls, delivering product presentations, handling objections, and converting prospects to successful customers.
3. Expand the sales from a handful to dozens
4. Train new hires
5. Implement a process to test, learn, and iterate on components of the sales playbook ensure optimization
6. Develop an accurate monthly forecast for the company
7. Hire a sales operations resource to develop an initial sales tech stack to improve sales efficiency
8. Assess sales metrics and translate insight into improvements
9. Provide on-going coaching to salespeople
10. Work with functional leaders from marketing, customer success, product, and finance to properly align sales execution with the broader company goals

Step 2 – Hiring Scorecard: Based on the role definition, what skills and experiences should I evaluate the candidates on during the interview process?

With a detailed definition of the tasks for this role, we can now translate the tasks into required criteria we will evaluate candidates on. Organize the criteria into Experience vs. Skills. Take time to agree on detailed definitions of each criteria as well clear direction on what a strong, mediocre, and poor assessment looks like. An example scorecard is shown below:

Hiring the First Sales Leader

Commonly used criteria, with corresponding definitions, for both the “skills” and “experience” categories are as follows.

Common “Skills” to Evaluate First Sales Leader Candidates On

Skill	Skill Definition	Scoring Model
Hiring	Develops and executes data-driven process to source, evaluate, and win optimal talent for our sales team.	[8-10] Optimizes ideal salesperson role based on our specific company context. Translates role into hiring criteria and executes consistent interviewing process to evaluate candidates based on qualitative and quantitative metrics. Proactively sources candidates. Understands candidate career aspiration and “sells” them on the role. [4-7] Utilizes an assessment process but struggles to adapt it to our company context. However, process is reasonably aligned with our needs. Some evidence of proactive candidate sourcing. [1-3] Hires solely on rolodex. Has a “know a good candidate when I see one” hiring mentality. Primarily hires on experience with the buyer and industry. Relies on passive candidate sourcing like recruiters and job ads. Fails to understand candidate career aspirations.
Coaching	Develops and executes data-driven process to diagnose skill deficiencies, customize coaching plans, and demonstrate improvements in sales performance.	[8-10] Uses a data-driven model to diagnose coaching needs and devise coaching plans. Continually develops all salespeople, not just under-performers. Evidence of developing salespeople to higher productivity and, in some cases, leadership ability. Empowers sellers to own their development. [4-7] Executes a coaching model but based on only qualitative, “gut-oriented” insights. Focuses on under-performers more than top performers. Coaches through “telling” versus “asking”. [1-3] Doesn't see value in coaching. When salespeople under-perform, instructs them to invite manager to their sales meetings so they can do their job for them.
Sales Methodology Development	Codifies, tests, and implements a repeatable process to set meetings, execute discovery calls, deliver product presentations, handle objections, and convert	[8-10] Adapts past sales methodologies to our specific context. Designs a consultative model that emphasizes understanding the buyer's perspective before deciding if and how to present the product. Aligns selling strategies with the stage of the buyer in their journey. Defines stage gates based on buyer versus seller action. Customizes tactics to the various personas involved in the decision-making unit. Tests sales playbook hypothesis to ensure optimization.

Skill	Skill Definition	Scoring Model
	prospects to successful customers.	[4-7] Leans on sales playbook from past experiences and struggles to adapt to our context. However, the playbook is a reasonable fit for us. Doesn't naturally set up process to test and optimize the playbook. [1-3] Views sales methodology as providing a salesperson with a territory, quota, and a pitch deck.
Leadership	Motivates the team to high performance. Manages conflict effectively. Holds the team accountable.	[8-10] Charismatic. Energizes sellers to work hard and smart. Gets the team's buy-in on tough changes. Develops a positive team environment where sellers collaborate and solve for the company. Lets sellers express their side in times of conflict. Solves conflict with the company's needs in mind and explains reasoning clearly. [4-7] Uses a command and control style, telling sellers what to do with minimal empowerment on their end. Team is siloed rather than collaborative. Solves conflict with the team's needs ahead of the company's needs. [1-3] Low energy. Indecisive. Solves for self. Lets sellers solve for themselves. Fosters cut-throat, individualistic culture.
Analytical	Uses data and repeatable process to set goals, assess progress, and accurately forecast outcomes.	[8-10] Pursues accurate data to understand sales team performance, diagnose issues, and accurately forecast outcomes. Translates broad data sets into insights and action. Balances qualitative and quantitative observations to make decisions. Consistently forecasts within 10% accuracy. [4-7] Wants the numbers but struggles to interpret them accurately. Leans on qualitative observations to drive decisions and forecasts. Consistently forecasts between 10% and 30% accuracy. [1-3] Resistant to the numbers. Doesn't see the value in them. Relies on gut for decision making and forecasts. Consistently forecasts with less than 30% accuracy.
Teamwork	Respected inside and outside the organization. Problem solves with colleagues/clients and handles conflict appropriately.	[8-10] Consistently works well with colleagues to solve key business problems. Fair minded, calm and respectful when handling conflict with peers or customers. Creates a strong sense of teamwork and camaraderie, not only within their team, but with colleagues. [4-7] Sees key decisions primarily through the lens of sales rather than the broader company. Debates and argues with peer leaders when faced with cross-functional decisions and process design. [1-3] Sales is the only thing that matters and everyone should follow suit. Personally insults colleagues when in conflict.

Hiring the First Sales Leader

Skill	Skill Definition	Scoring Model
Culture Fit	Intellectually curious. Consistently refining how to be best in class in industry. History of high integrity behavior with peers and customers. High emotional intelligence.	[8-10] Sets high professional and personal goals, seeks out both internal and external benchmarks. Takes responsibility for revenue performance, looks for solutions instead of giving excuses. Demonstrates honesty, transparency and immediacy in all interactions. Keeps confidences and exhibits discretion. Consistently does what needs to be done when it needs to be done. [4-7] Looks for direction but is not necessarily proactive. Tendency to over-plan and under-execute. [1-3] Sees job as a paycheck and nuisance. Blames others. Holds back information. Political.

Step 3 – Evaluation Process: What are the steps in the evaluation process and how do we execute each step?

With the evaluation criteria clearly defined, we can now design a detailed evaluation process. The evaluation process includes the high-level steps in the overall assessment process, the people involved, and suggested questions in each step. An example of an evaluation process is below.

Example interview process for the first sales leadership hire:

Hiring the First Sales Leader

Phone screen by Recruiter:

Step	Sample Questions
Thanks, welcome, and introductions
Understand candidate career aspirations	1. What piqued your interest in our company and this role? 2. Where do you hope to be in your career in 5 years?
Validate "Experience" information on resume	Based on your resume, it looks like you have: 1. 6 years in individual quota carrying roles 2. 2 years in sales leadership roles 3. 4 years of experience selling into [insert our industry] 4. And 3 years selling to [insert our buyer persona] Is this correct?
Evaluate additional "Experience"	1. How many salespeople have you hired in your career? Can you walk me through how many that you hired ended up leaving your team and why? 2. What is the largest team you have managed? Is that only quota-carrying sellers or other roles too? 3. Have you ever hired a sales operations person? What was their specific role and how did the hire perform? 4. In which roles were you selling a product similar to our value proposition? 5. As you may know, our product price is between [insert our product price range] and is sold through [insert our sales channel(s)]. Can you indicate which experiences where you sold similarly priced products through similar channels?
Request other "Experience" information	Can you send me the following information before our next interview? 1. Your achievement against goal over the last 5 years 2. Any sales playbooks you developed in past roles
Ask for questions	Do you have questions about our company or the role that I can answer?
Ask about interest (if continuing)	Based on our discussion, are you interested in moving forward?
Schedule and explain next steps (if continuing)
